Dear Chairman Wheeler:

Companies that build and develop technology solutions and platforms are among the most reliant on advanced broadband networks. Our company, RevSpring, is the industry leading business process outsourcing (BPO) revenue cycle technology provider serving the accounts receivable management, healthcare, home services and financial services markets.

At RevSpring, we believe One Size Fits One. It is a philosophy that drives our business, our technology and each and every customer interaction. In fact, RevSpring facilitates more than one billion customer interactions annually through our consumer-centric communication and payment platform.

One size fits one is why we have chosen a competitive broadband provider who shares our vision. They help our team of technology professionals collaborate and streamline projects -tasks that often includes large files and heavy bandwidth use. Our team is geographically diverse, with operations spanning seven states that include technology centers, production facilities and sales and support centers.

The issue of technology transitions for broadband networks is of high importance to our company, and the entire tech industry. New networks will drive the future of our economy, and access to new products and services. But policies that favor broadband providers who only offer a 'one size fits all' model could limit both choice and customer service in the business marketplace.

We encourage you to preserve competitive choices and options as you set policy for the tech transition.

Sincerely,
